

You have briefly read through a selection of tabloid and broadsheet papers. What makes newspaper writing different from other sorts of writing?

You may have discovered the following things:

Complete with these words: articles, subheadings, columns, caption, reports, headlines, pictures, interviews.

- Newspaper writing is in _____.
- Newspaper stories are often called _____ or _____.
- All articles' titles are called _____.
- Many articles have _____ to go with them; the writing under a picture is called a _____.
- Articles are often split into sections by _____; often these are just one word.
- Articles often include _____ with people involved in the incident.

Use the above words to complete this article:

[_____]

[_____]

[_____]
ROYAL LINK: Charles
[_____]

Internet debut for Charles

By MIRROR REPORTER

THE Prince of Wales was set to link up with computer buffs worldwide last night when he made his debut on the Internet.

[_____]

Subscribers to the information superhighway will be able to see the Prince's comments about his own Business Leaders Forum.

[_____]

billion

And the potential one billion subscribers worldwide will be able to read the text of his speech to a celebrity gathering at St James Palace in London today to mark the Forum's fifth anniversary.

The Prince's Internet debut - thought to be a Royal first - shows his efforts to involve business leaders in solving community problems.

[_____]

A forum spokesman said of the Internet venture:

"It's a way of getting the same message across to schoolchildren gathered round the computer in an Indian village and to a boardroom in New York."